

Archives of Ophthalmology, Vol. 49 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Archives of Ophthalmology, Vol. 49 All of us will agree, I am sure, that the training of ophthalmologists up to the present time has been highly unsatisfactory. The men have been thrown largely upon their own resources, compelled to teach themselves and, above all, provided with imperfect facilities for so doing. To have been compelled to teach themselves has not been altogether unfortunate, and I think that in the future also the most eminent ophthalmologists will continue to be largely self taught, but I hope that their tasks will be rendered easier and that they will reach still higher standards than in the past. It will never be possible to make a silk purse out of a sows ear and one of our endeavors at the outset should be to exclude the unfit and attract men of natural ability into our specialty. The suggestions that I have to make on the teaching of ophthalmology are based partly on my experience as a teacher, and partly on my experience in the practice of ophthalmology. As a teacher I have acquired certain views in regard to methods of instruction, as a practitioner, my own needs as well as those of colleagues have indicated to me some of the subjects that should be taught. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work. Forgotten Books uses state-of-the-art technology to digitally reconstruct the work, preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy.
