

Jonathan Meese: Drawings. Vol. I

In his early drawings from the 1990s--with their energetically-rendered juxtapositions of text and image--German artist Jonathan Meese gave voice to a particularly contemporary strain of abjection: Soon Ill have a lot to say, sorry, reads one. I feel like Im shuddering all over, declares another. And a third is helpfully labeled, This is someone burning from the inside out. Continuing in this vein, Meeses captions illustrate hundreds of works--created on his mothers living room floor while he was in his twenties, with the cheapest available materials. They feature Expressionistic figures with distorted features--and, though drawn with great urgency, feel very delicately composed. As seen together in this volume, the importance of these drawings emerges. They are the angst-filled foundation of Meeses mature work--a tortured melange of installation, sculpture and performance that is infamously contentious and internationally renowned.
