Not illustrated. 1862 Excerpt: ... they fall, celestial fountains Uprise, and holier lise is born. More solemn, yet more sweet, the voices Of birds, and brooks, and breezes chime; All nature with thy joy rejoices, Yet owns, subdued, the hallowed time. Thrice welcome guest! soft influence shedding Propitious, like some planet fair 1 Thy halcyon wings, serenely spreading, Smooth the rough waves of toil and care. O well for man, to whom is given One day from meaner thoughts reprieved! O ill for man, if all the seven For earthly needs he toiled and grieved! O sons of toil, in respite holy, Come forth the works of God to see! But first, within His temple lowly, Unbare the head, and bow the knee! Thus, week by week, in glad succession, Sweet rest the Sabbath light affords, Till Christ oer all shall take possession, And every day shall be the Lords. C. L. Ford. EASTER DA Y. PATHWAY opens from the tomb, The graves a grave no more! Stoop down: look into that sweet room: Pass through the unsealed door: Linger a moment by the bed, Where lay but yesterday the Churchs Head. What is there there to make thee sear 1 A folded chamber-vest, Akin to that which thou shalt wear, When for thy slumber drest; Two gentle angels sitting by--How sweet a room, methinks, wherein to lie! No gloomy vault, no charnel cell, No emblems of decay, No solemn sound of palling bell, To say, Hes gone away;--But angel-whispers soft and clear, And He, the risen Jesus, standing near. Why weepst thou 1 Whom seekest thou? Tis not the gardeners voice, But His to Whom all knees shall bow, In Whom all hearts rejoice; The voice of Him who yesterday Within that rock was Deaths resistless prey. Why weepst thou 1 Whom seekest thou? The living with the dead V Take young spring flowers and deck thy brow,...
